Kent school head defends sending home girls in too-short skirts

Parents of pupils at Ebbsfleet academy can have them educated elsewhere if they object to the uniform rules, says principal

A headteacher in Kent has defended sending pupils home from school because their skirts were too short, saying parents who did not like the strict uniform rules could choose to have their daughters educated elsewhere.

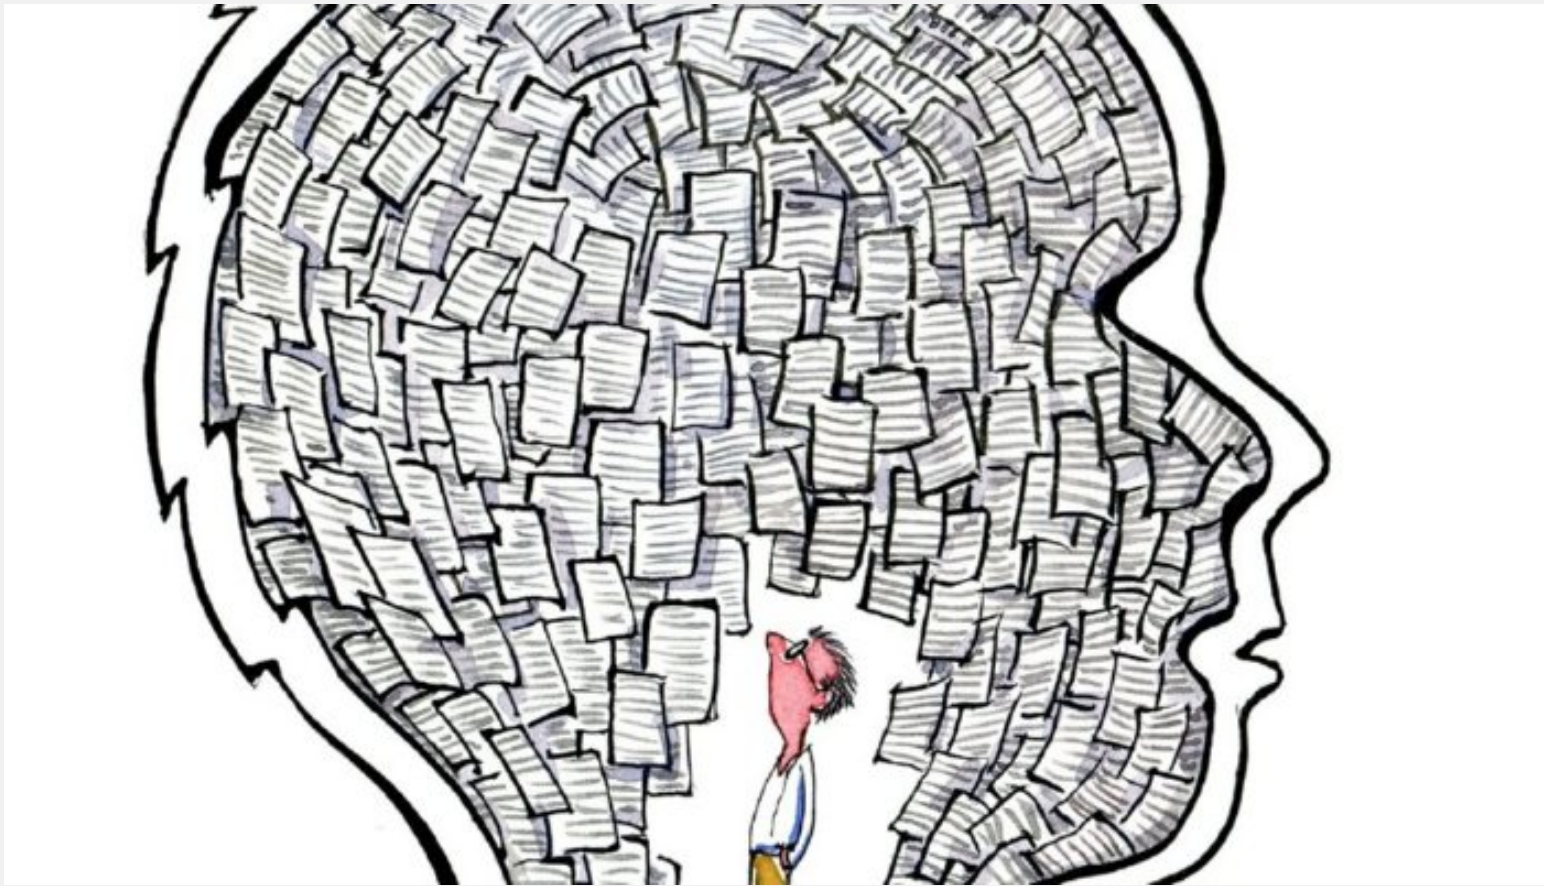

Girls at Ebbsfleet academy in Swanscombe were turned away on the first day of term after Christmas because their skirts did not conform to uniform policy which stipulates that skirts should be navy A-line or pleated and no shorter than 5cm
